FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

- Global equities rose in October. In the US, higher consumption and investment lifted the economy, bolstering equities and the US dollar. The White House mulled over Fed chairmanship as balance sheet reduction began.
- Elsewhere, the Eurozone economy advanced, easing concerns that a strengthening euro would impede economic growth.
- Following China's widely-watched National Party Congress, its economy showed signs of softening with manufacturing activity falling, although it remained on track to reach its full-year growth target, which buoyed sentiment.
- Japanese equities were bolstered by incumbent prime minister Shinzo Abe's snap election victory, and the Bank of Japan maintaining monetary stimulus.
- The energy sector also benefited from Brent crude rising above US$60 a barrel, on hopes that Opec-led supply curbs would be extended.
- There were no major portfolio changes in October.
