FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTS

- Global equities had a rough start to the year, as stocks fell across both developed and emerging markets in January.
- Investors were unnerved by a sell-off in Chinese A-shares amid a renewed bout of risk aversion, as well as disappointing US retail and manufacturing data. Oil's drop to below US$30 a barrel compounded fears.
- However, sentiment was buoyed towards the end of the month, when the oil price recovered slightly on speculation about possible production cuts, and the Bank of Japan unexpectedly imposed negative interest rates, in a bid to spur lending and spending.
- In January, we initiated a position in MTR Corporation, as part of ongoing efforts to diversify the portfolio. MTR boasts robust city-rail operations in Hong Kong and China, with a unique model that also allows it to develop property; the company is the largest landbank owner in Hong Kong. This provides attractive defensive qualities against an uncertain economic environment. We also introduced Michigan-based Perrigo, a leading international manufacturer of over-the-counter pharmaceuticals that benefits from an effective distribution network. We added to Bayer and Henkel & Co.
